

Samsung Electronics' CEO met with the Family Committee and made apology to the affected families

Kwon Oh-hyun, the CEO and Vice Chairman of Samsung Electronics, met with the Family Committee and conveyed his deepest condolences for their suffering.

Participating in the meeting at the Samsung Electronics headquarters office, he handed a written apology letter to the affected families. After the company reached an agreement with the Family Committee and the SHARPS, the CEO met with the affected families in person and made his heartfelt apology.

In the meeting, he said "I am grateful to meet you and send my condolences in person. I appreciate your understanding and endeavor to resolve this issue"

In his apology letter, the CEO said "I have to admit that we have not deeply understood the painful situation you have faced. I apologize for not resolving the situation at the earliest possible."

Even though scientific correlation between the workplace environment and employee illness has not been proven, Samsung has been working tirelessly to help our former employees suffering from leukemia and their affected families.
